Logic:

A man was driving down a country road in a truck. About every five miles he would stop the truck, get out and beat the side of it with a club. This happened several times. A man driving behind him stopped and asked him why he was stopping every few miles and beating the truck. The truck driver replied, “I have a one-ton truck, and I’m hauling two tons of canaries and it is necessary to keep half of them air borne.”
